Vice-Senior General Soe Win underscored that population data are essential for effective management to allocate natural resources and finance, construction of infrastructures such as schools, hospitals, health units, roads and bridges, care for those with disabilities and older persons and creation of employment opportunities.

Patron of the Central Census Commission Vice-Chairman of the State Administration Council Deputy Prime Minister Vice-Senior General Soe Win delivered an address at the ceremony to mark the 2024 World Population Day at the Myanmar International Convention Centre II in Nay Pyi Taw yesterday morning.

Speaking on the occasion, the Vice-Senior General highlighted that the increasing global population brings food deficiency, shortage of drinking water, climate change, spreading of infectious diseases, worse impacts of natural disasters, inequality and high rate of poverty in addition to problems on the social standard gap.

He continued that the majority of developing countries are experiencing a lesser number of children, a shortage of labour and an increasing number of older persons due to a remarkable decline in birth rates. At the same time, some developing countries and least developed countries are also facing high birth rates, lower standards of education, a larger

Census supports population and socioeconomic statistics to adopt correct policies, strategies and tactics

Population data contribute to ensuring correct voter lists, not losing opportunities for all eligible voters and successfully holding a free and fair general election.

Salient points from the speech of the Vice-Senior General at the 2024 World Population Day ceremony

1. Population data are essential for effective management for allocating natural resources and finance, construction of infrastructures such as schools, hospitals, health units, roads and bridges, care for those with disabilities and older persons and creation of employment opportunities.
2. The increasing global population brings food deficiency, shortage of drinking water, climate change, spreading of infectious diseases, worse impacts of natural disasters, inequality and high rate of poverty in addition to problems on the social standard gap.
3. This year's theme, "Helping vulnerable population in emergencies", aims to improve life safety, prestige and health to fulfil the requirements of those from vulnerable groups.

He pointed out that this year's theme, "Helping vulnerable population in emergencies", aims to improve life safety, prestige and health for fulfilling the requirements of families and society from vulnerable older persons, girls, children, those with disabilities and poor persons.

sons, girls, children, those with disabilities and poor persons.

The Vice-Senior General spotted that UN member states have agreed to implement sustainable development goals adopted by the UN to overcome global challenges such as poverty, inequality, climate change, environmental degradation, and lack of peace and justice.

He said that the majority of global countries, including technologically developing countries, conduct census-taking measures as usual to obtain these data.

He emphasized that the United Nations has issued the Principles and Recommendations to enumerate the census, adding that as population and socioeconomic data can be obtained from population census in different areas of the nation, collection of population census is essential for all.

The Vice-Senior General said the significant characteristic of the census is that it provides data to the minor administrative areas, such as wards and village-tracts. Data from the census can support statistics on population and socioeconomic data for adopting correct policies, strategies and tactics as well as drawing projects, he added.

He recounted that the 2019 interim census was taken in order to know changes in socioeconomic data and compare data from these censuses before collecting one more census, and these data are helpful till today.

He underlined that Myanmar is making preparations to take population and household census from 1 to 15 October 2024 with the aim of ensuring firmness of estimated annual population data of the nation and taking correct data for sector-wise development projects and research works.

He continued that as the enumeration of the census is a single project for ensuring the availability of socioeconomic data, which is vital for adopting development projects and policies of the nation, it is necessary to strive for the successful undertaking of the census-taking process as a national duty.

The Vice-Senior General stressed that population data will contribute to ensuring correct voter lists, not losing opportunities for all eligible voters and successfully holding a free and fair general election.

The Vice-Senior General noted that everybody needs to lend a helping hand to those from the vulnerable group, whereas regional authorities need to prepare emergency management plans.

Union Minister for Immigration and Population U Myint Kyaing reported on the population's role in the development of Myanmar.

A video clip on helping vulnerable population in emergencies was presented.

The ceremony was also attended by SAC members, the chairman of the Union Election Commission, Union ministers, the Nay Pyi Taw Council chairman, deputy ministers and departmental heads, diplomats, and officials.

Joint Statement of 23 Political Parties

11 July 2024

1. The three northern alliance launched attacks named Operation 1027 in Shan State (North) in October 2023. Then, MNDAA/TNLA/AA and the armed groups restarted terrorist attacks called the second phase of Operation 1027, starting in June 2024, taking advantage of a ceasefire.
2. Currently, these terrorist groups commit acts of terrorism, such as killing innocent civilians, attacking major cities and non-military targets using heavy weapons and bomb drops, and threatening national races in their controlled areas.
3. We, political parties, consider these situations as follows: -
 - (a) The national people have been living in unity across the nation for a long time. However, these terrorist groups threaten and drive away other national races from their controlled areas. Such doings intentionally destroy the unity of national people who are living on the same land and drinking water from the same source, and obviously break the stipulation stated in Section 355 of the 2008 Constitution of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar: "Every citizen shall have the right to settle and reside in any place within the Republic of the Union of Myanmar according to law".
 - (b) Driving away of other ethnic tribes by terrorist group from their controlled areas also breaks Article 13(1) of the Universal Declaration on Human Rights: "Everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each state".
 - (c) Moreover, supervisors of these terrorist groups are also against the existing laws and constitution, ungrateful to the country, and breach international human rights.
4. Therefore, we, political parties, on behalf of the indigenous people across the nation, do not accept them and strongly oppose and condemn all the organizations that communicate with terrorist groups directly or indirectly.
5. Moreover, the relevant departments and organizations are urged to accelerate the momentum as follows: -
 - (a) Make efforts to announce these armed groups as terrorist groups not only in local but also in international countries.
 - (b) Declare the supervisors of these terrorist groups as terrorists, and communicate with ASEAN Police Forces, International Criminal Police Organization, and international police forces to carry out necessary measures.
6. Therefore, we, political parties, release this joint statement opposing and condemning MNDAA/TNLA/AA and their subordinates.

Emphasize rescue, relief, and rehabilitation in the aftermath of disasters

THE Department of Meteorology and Hydrology recently warned residents in Shwegu, Bhamo, Katha, Phaungpyin, Mawlaik, Mogaung, Myitkyina, Khamti, and Homalin townships to be cautious of water overflow from the Ayeyawady and Chindwin rivers, as well as Nanyin and Nankaung creeks. Globally, people are facing impacts of severe climate challenges, including heatwaves, droughts, and storms.

In 2024, Afghanistan, Brazil, Indonesia, Kenya, Oman, UAE, and many other countries experienced devastating floods, rendering thousands homeless and causing significant property damage; even the governments of these countries conducted proper management to defy the natural disasters.

The World Meteorology Organization (WMO) of the United Nations reported a significant increase in natural disasters over the past fifty years, resulting in substantial economic losses. From 1970 to 2021, severe climatic conditions and flooding have led to 11,778 natural disasters. United Nations surveys indicate that 74 per cent of natural disasters between 2001 and 2018 were water-related, with over 2 billion people affected by flooding from 1998 to 2017.

Myanmar, located in a disaster-prone area, frequently faces various natural disasters. Besides fires, floods and inundations cause the second-largest losses. From June to October every year, many parts of the country experience river overflows and flooding due to monsoon winds and heavy rains.

Despite current flooding in some regions, water levels in rivers and creeks are expected to recede soon. The most crucial phase after flooding is rehabilitation. Authorities must prioritize search and rescue operations during disasters and adapt their relief and rehabilitation measures afterwards. Without proper disaster preparedness and management, communities will suffer significant loss and damage.

The rising trend of natural disasters worldwide, exacerbated by climate change, necessitates a robust focus on rescue, relief, and rehabilitation. Effective disaster management, including timely warnings, efficient rescue operations, and comprehensive rehabilitation strategies, is vital to mitigate the impact of such events on affected communities.

In fact, emergency response to disasters, especially flooding, is of great importance. Hence, local authorities and people need to join hands in rehabilitation and reconstruction so that society can normalize the daily routine of the people through the collaborative efforts of charity organizations, social organizations, and security forces. If so, society will successfully overcome the challenges of natural disasters with proper management of rescue, relief, and rehabilitation for all in order to minimize loss and damage to property and the casualties of people as much as possible.

Education Systems

Around the year 1961-62, according to the state education system, I had the chance to start learning English in the 5th Grade. At that time, the average age of students in the 5th Grade was around 10 or 11. We could read and write Burmese quite well, along with fundamental mathematics. Typically, KG to 4th Grade was in State Primary School, 5th Grade to 7th Grade was in State Middle School, and 8th Grade to 10th Grade or Matriculation was in State High School.

State Middle School

After passing 4th Standard, I moved from primary school to State Middle School in Meiktila Township. Our courses changed a lot, especially in English, Algebra, and Geometry. Of all the compulsory subjects, I was most interested in English. I noticed that our English teachers, except for Headmaster U Kyaw Nyein, had also learned English starting in the 5th Grade. So, I was not satisfied with their pronunciation as they naturally inclined towards Burmese sounds. The headmaster taught English only in the 7th Grade, and all students, including my elder brother and sister, were afraid of his rank and style of teaching.

During my 5th Grade in middle school, I was lucky to have the opportunity to learn English grammar and composition from my cousin, who had passed matriculation many years ago. He provided me with a solid foundation in English grammar and composition, which gave me the confidence to pursue self-study. During the summer holidays, right after the final examination of 5th Grade, I borrowed the old 6th-grade English textbook from my sister and studied it on my own during the long break. I could read and understand almost all the chapters before the start of the next school term. I also obtained a valuable English composition exercise book, although I cannot recall how I got it. I read it and completed all the exercises in the book as a general foundation. I am sure that students in the mission schools in Myanmar at that time may not have needed to study as diligently as I did.

Upon entering seventh Grade, our respected Headmaster, U Kyaw Nyein, began teaching our English class. With around 40 students, most were typical learners except for my close friend Soe Myint, who excelled in mathematics and had a knack for dressing sharply since primary school. The headmaster would read each chapter aloud and explain in Burmese when needed. After reading, he Editorials from The Global New Light of Myanmar.

During my early studies, I consistently ranked first in English in monthly examinations. Living in a rural area meant access to English books was limited to school textbooks. After completing sixth Grade, I delved into my sister's seventh-grade English textbook to prepare for the upcoming school term. I meticulously studied its comprehension passages and completed all exercises diligently throughout the entire summer break, along with revising my previous English composition exercises.

Upon entering seventh Grade, our respected Headmaster, U Kyaw Nyein, began teaching our English class. With around 40 students, most were typical learners except for my close friend Soe Myint, who excelled in mathematics and had a knack for dressing sharply since primary school. The headmaster would read each chapter aloud and explain in Burmese when needed. After reading, he would challenge us: "Stand up; if you can fill in the first line of the exercise, you may sit." Having prepared over the summer, I quickly filled in the blanks and sat down. Recognizing my readiness, the headmaster singled me out to confirm my answers. This pattern repeated with each new exercise, and I consistently stood alone as the only student to complete the tasks correctly. As a result, I maintained my top position in English throughout the school year, repeating my first-place performance from the previous year.

Life often turns out quite different from our expectations. During my middle school years, the government granted a stipend for outstanding students in high school. For three years in high school, outstanding 7th-grade students had to sit for an examination, and those who passed would receive a stipend. Unfortunately, our headmaster moved to a new middle school in town before the mid-term of my 7th Grade. I noticed that the deputy headmaster elected Soe Myint for the scholarship examination. This news deeply saddened and depressed me. I struggled to sleep, lost interest in my studies, and did not share my frustration with my parents.

A few months later, a new headmaster took over at our school. He was a young, qualified, and quiet teacher. One early morning before class, I approached him and asked why, despite achieving first place in all subjects in the monthly exams, I had not been selected for the scholarship examination. The headmaster explained that the decision had been made before he arrived and that he couldn't help. After hearing his remarks, I felt even more upset and considered giving up on my school lessons. However, I managed to pass the 7th Grade with flying colours.

State High School

I moved to No 1 State High

School in Meiktila town just after finishing middle school. On the first day, I learned that the high school syllabus had changed, and we needed to decide whether to study science or arts. Although I thought arts subjects would be easier, I was drawn to studying a science combination of physics, chemistry, and mathematics despite being weak in math. If I had chosen arts, I would have had to move to No 2 SHS immediately. I preferred No 1 SHS as it was more convenient for me to study there.

In the 8th Grade, we were introduced to physics, chemistry, and mathematics by newly graduated teachers from various universities. My impression of the education system was relatively low, and due to previous negative experiences, I wasn't entirely interested in my studies. Despite the teachers' efforts, nearly half of the students failed the exams because the science subjects were new to us. Although I passed, the failure of so many classmates was a wake-up call for me. I resolved to approach my future studies with renewed enthusiasm and dedication.

In 9th Grade, known as the 'High School Final', which was directly controlled by the board of education, only a few per cent of students passed annually. That was the first significant step in higher education, so I studied hard, just as I did in middle school. During 9th Grade, I had the opportunity to study under excellent teachers, U San Shwe and Daw Yin Mya. U San Shwe was very patient and kind to students. He taught English textbooks thoroughly, sentence by sentence and word by word. He often spent almost a month on a single paragraph, providing examples and exercises. Both he and Daw Yin Mya taught us English grammar, composition, and essay writing. Their generous and stimulating teaching gave us a strong foundation in English. I am deeply grateful to our teachers for their kind guidance.

One day in June 1965, I discovered my name in the daily newspaper's list of those who passed the high school final examination. I was so happy and excited to achieve such a difficult award. The exam was hard to pass; less than 10 per cent of the candidates succeeded during that time. I knew that my position was within reach of higher education, intending to earn a degree soon. I focused on my matriculation courses, especially English, along with Mathematics, Physics, and Chemistry.

In the metric class, we were fortunate to learn English under the guidance of teacher U Kyi Soe, who holds a BA BED degree specializing in English. He taught us English grammar, composition, essay writing, and paragraph writing. Saya U Kyi Soe's English pronunciation was clear and precise, and he provided us with many comprehension exercises. We all enjoyed his class and felt free to ask him anything we wanted to know. The most interesting lesson was when he introduced us to editorials from newspapers to help us learn current usages, idioms, slang, and colloquial English. He brought various daily newspapers to class and distributed one to each student. Holding a newspaper himself, he guided us through the editorial, explaining the rich vocabulary, phrasal verbs, and speeches of world leaders found in English newspapers. He read an editorial aloud, thoroughly explaining it sentence by sentence and phrase by phrase. He then encouraged us to read the entire newspaper casually and later analyze the editorials in detail, focusing on their English usage, style, grammar, and contemporary idioms.

One morning in class, our beloved teacher, U Kyi Soe, suggested we cut out editorials from various newspapers without considering the date of issue and keep them together with clips. The next day, we bought new or old English newspapers from the market, mostly from shops that used old newspapers for wrapping. We could buy them cheaply as they were sold by weight. I recall that most of them were The Guardian newspapers at that time. We cut out the editorials with scissors, bound them together with paper clips, and brought them to the classroom the next day.

Our teacher was delighted and commended us for our enthusiasm in English, appreciating our willingness to follow his guidance. From that time on, we read editorials both in class and at home whenever we had time. Teacher U Kyi Soe encouraged us to read our selected editorials aloud one by one, explained their meanings and how the writers conveyed the themes and had us note down his explanations in our notebooks. Additionally, Saya introduced us to the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA) for better English pronunciation – the phonetic key served as our guide to pronounce vocabulary correctly, enabling us to study independently. By following our teacher's guidelines, we all became familiar with English from a broader perspective and gained confidence in self-study. Simultaneously, our English skills significantly improved by studying editorials from English newspapers. My teacher's method of teaching English remains fresh in my memory, along with his kindness.

Teacher U Kyi Soe told us that English idioms, proverbs, and expressions are important parts of everyday English. They come up all the time in both spoken and written English. As idioms do not always make sense literally, you will need to familiarize yourself with the meaning and usage of each idiom. Therefore, you may need a lot of work despite learning idioms being fun, especially when you compare English idioms to your language. You can find all the above valuable knowledge from daily newspapers and editorials that you read daily.

After passing my final high school examination, I moved to Mandalay for higher education. While attending the Arts and Sciences University of Mandalay for a BSc (Geology) degree, I regularly read daily English newspapers. I was fortunate that we studied all geology subjects in English. Upon graduation, I moved to Yangon to join the Ministry of Mines. In Yangon, I had access to more books and resources for studying English, and I attended Spoken English classes. U Aung Kyaw's 'Su Su and Tu Tu' English class taught me spoken English based on newspaper reading, including editorials and IPA phonetics.

I had a significant opportunity to study spoken English with BBS U Hla Bu, a retired famous announcer of the Burma Broadcasting Service in the 1960s. He taught us advanced courses in phonetics, listening, and retelling radio talks, plays, and editorials. I also visited the USIS Library to borrow and read English books, including novels and short stories, and I listened to both VOA and BBC radio stations daily.

Additionally, I was assigned to the UN Tin/Tungsten Projects, where I had the chance to interact with UN experts from various countries, including Canada, America, Holland, Israel, Germany, and Britain, who all spoke English. I had the opportunity to buy both old and new English newspapers, such as the Bangkok Post and The Straits Times from Thailand, while I was in Mergui, Bokpyin, and Kawthoung in the Tenasserim offshore fields. I read all the editorials whenever I had time. As a counterpart geologist to expert geologists, I gained extensive experience in mineral exploration. Consequently, my English proficiency improved, enabling me to manage a Joint Venture Programme with foreign companies successfully from 1995 to 2004.

My lifelong ambition and determination to achieve excellence in English never faded. It inspired me to continue my journey of learning and teaching English to this day. I dedicate this article to all former and current editors of English newspapers.

Social aid groups offer disaster relief training

ACCORDING to Ma Shwe Lei, chairperson of the Shwe Myittta Association, social aid groups are conducting training to improve individual skills in flood disaster relief.

“We are here to help the people. We all are rescuers from water when natural disasters occur. Instead of formal training, all those who are involved in water rescue get together to practise together,” said Ma Shwe Lei, who organized the drill.

The operations are different in water rescue and land rescue, and rescue operations must always be practised. Rescue operations are carried out in the midst of life-threatening situations, so efforts must be made to improve individual skills, she said.

“Lay Maung, who is known as the father of the rescue circle, gave us another training. Saya Toe Gyi is also included,” she said.

In addition, the young people who are new to the rescue team are trained together so that rescuers themselves do not become second victims.

“There are more new young people joining the rescue team. For the new ones, we practise together with them. We train them what to do in the water and what to avoid. The most important thing is that the rescuers do not become second victims. That is why we are practising together,” she said. — Thit Taw/ZN

The screenshot validates misinformation.

Subversive media spread false claims about security forces in Ye Township

MALICIOUS media are circulating misinformation, falsely claiming that security forces killed a man and arrested two others to use as human shields on 8 July in Ye Township, Mon State.

Syria restores core part of agricultural infrastructure after war

SYRIA has restored the bulk of its agricultural infrastructure destroyed during the war, Syrian Minister of Agriculture Hassan Katana told Sputnik.

"Agricultural production is affected by many factors, including the destruction of infrastructure and institutions that supported production, which was happening since the beginning of the war. Much of this has been rebuilt, including research and veterinary centers, a number of factories supporting production, and where possible, water supply infrastructure," he said.

The main problem for agriculture in Syria is still the "provision of means of production and the increase in their cost, a decrease in the technological level and wear and tear of agricultural machinery, rising prices for imported equipment, its shortage and the increased cost of servicing existing equipment," Katana said. — SPUTNIK

King Charles III urges England team to spare fans Euro 2024 'drama'

KING Charles III has congratulated the England football team on reaching the final of Euro 2024 and jokingly urged them to win the tournament without any nerve-shredding last-minute drama.

Britain's head of state sent the team his "warmest congratulations" after their 2-1 win against The Netherlands on Wednesday evening and his "very best wishes" for Sunday's final against Spain.

But he urged them to play with the nation's blood pressure in mind after fans endured the suspense of a last-gasp equalizer in the second round against Slovakia, a penalty triumph against Switzerland in the quarterfinal, and Ollie Watkins' 90th-minute winner to send them through to the final.

Jaishankar emphasized the need to swiftly enhance regional cooperation, acknowledging the importance of open and candid exchange of ideas among member nations.

EXTERNAL Affairs Minister S Jaishankar articulated India's strategic alignment with the Bay of Bengal Initiative for Multi-Sectoral Technical and Economic Cooperation (BIMSTEC), highlighting its significance within the country's broader geopolitical frameworks like – Neighbourhood First, Act East Policy and SAGAR vision.

“For India, BIMSTEC represents the intersection of its ‘Neighbourhood First’ outlook, the ‘Act East Policy’ and the ‘SAGAR’ vision. Each of these endeavours is being purposed with a specific focus on the Bay of Bengal, where collaborative potential has long remained underrealized,” said Jaishankar addressing the BIMSTEC Foreign Ministers’ Retreat in New Delhi on Thursday.

He added, “Our challenge is to change that for the better, and to do so rapidly. The retreat is meant to exchange ideas openly, candidly and fruitfully. We all benefited from the last such exercise in Bangkok.”

The Minister stressed the Summit's importance, noting, “This one now has a particular importance as it serves to prepare strong outcomes for the Summit to be held later in the year. Our message should be clear – that we are all determined to infuse new energies, new resources and a new commitment into cooperation among the Bay of Bengal nations.”

Highlighting the recent developments within BIMSTEC, Jaishankar noted, “The BIMSTEC Charter, for a start, has come into effect from 20 May this year. Global and regional developments also make it imperative that we find more solutions amongst ourselves.” — ANI
