Residents Urged to Prioritize Public Safety Amid Armed Terrorist Threats

ARMED terrorists have been launching attacks by using residential homes and administrative buildings in towns and villages as cover, where they have forcibly settled. They aim to shield themselves from Tatmadaw counterattacks while also persuading temporarily displaced persons to return to their native areas and recruiting new members. That enables terrorists to use civilians as human shields. Tatmadaw is committed to safeguarding the sovereignty of the State and will respond to these threats based on intelligence and prevailing conditions. Therefore, residents in areas where terrorists have taken control must prioritize their safety and protect themselves from being exploited by these groups.

Premature fish sales at high prices disrupt breeding and production

THE prices of freshwater products, which are part of basic food-stuffs for people, are on the rise due to the high consumption and the sale of premature fish, although it can disrupt the regular breeding and production chain, according to the Shwe Padauk Fish Market in Hline Township, Yangon.

Before the first week of July, when saltwater products started entering the market, freshwater products were fetching good prices. As a result, fish pond owners in Ayeyawady Region, Yangon Region, and Bago Region harvested their ponds ahead of schedule. This was because the current market prices offered higher profits than raising the fish to full maturity, and the savings on fish feed costs and the ability to avoid possible flooding of ponds caused by weather conditions. The fish were then sent for sale to the Shwe Padauk and Central San Pya fish markets. “Due to good fish prices and other factors, the fish farmers are sending small-sized fish to the market instead of breeding them to full size as before. This is more profitable for them and also reduces the production costs. However, the production and consumption are no longer running as usual, and the fish production chain could be disrupted. Normally, fish are raised for 10 months to a year before being sold, but now they are being harvested and sold after only four or five months. Since this is not a seasonal breeding and production pattern, it could affect both the market and freshwater production. If fish supply decreases, prices will rise, and if there is no regular breeding and production, fish farming could be impacted. The situation may only return to normal in the coming open season and monsoon season,” said Vice-Chair U Aye Ko of the Shwe Padauk Fish Market

Development Committee. The arrival of small-sized fish into the market, there is only 20 per cent of fish breeding in export size. The fish farming rate declines due to the difficulties in purchasing the fish at four or five inches and the high prices. Such cases cause high fish prices. As the farmed fish are entering the Yangon fish markets, and due to the arrival of undersized fish, the distribution of large-sized fish has decreased. Fish traders are sending these fish to regions and states, including Nay Pyi Taw, and also to various townships in Yangon. Consumers are buying the smaller-sized fish at the prices as same prices as the larger ones. The Shwe Padauk Fish Market received 500,000 visses of marine products per day previously, and now 300,000 visses or above. — Thitsa(MNA)/KTZH

Myanmar partners with India, Uzbekistan to boost cotton resilience, fair pricing

MYANMAR Cotton and Cotton Products Merchants and Manufacturers Association has been connecting with India and Uzbekistan to get access to cotton varieties that are resilient to weather changes and engineered to withstand high temperatures and diseases, maintaining high yields with a fairer price.

There is a large price gap between premium cotton and non-premium cotton. Therefore, cotton growers need to grow premium pedigree cotton for commercial benefits. If they grow whatever, they might experience low yield and high risks. Cotton ginnerers also need to maintain quality control, and so, cotton ginnerers must prioritize cleanliness and systematic operations to ensure product quality, minimize waste and maintain a safe working environment, the association stated.

“When growers neglect cottonseed consistency, their efforts will be fruitless. Ginnerers need to maintain quality by categorizing the cotton varieties and processing systematic operations. This way, nothing will go in vain. If not, the time, energy and resources that they put into cotton cultivation and production will be wasted. Later, it might affect the cotton-based industry, resulting in other negative consequences,” said a representative of the association.

The association has already informed the department concerned of this. It will coordinate matters for the growers to get access to high-yielding cotton varieties and achieve good prices.

International Federation of Business Intellectuals and Changemakers (IFBIC), on behalf of 000 Farms located in Rajkot, Gujarat State, India, expressed willingness to collaborate for high-yielding cotton access. The Myanmar Cotton and Cotton Products Merchants and Manufacturers Association held a Zoom meeting on 14 August with counterparts regarding that matter, the Myanmar Trade Promotion Organization under the Ministry of Commerce stated.

Moreover, Uzbekistan also informed Myanmar that the Agriculture Department wants to deliver pest-free high-yielding cotton varieties to Myanmar, according to MyanTrade’s notification dated 7 August.

ILLEGAL trade can only be reduced and eliminated when the various dishonest methods involved are uncovered, arrested, and suppressed. The increase in arrests also indicates that illegal goods are entering the country monthly through various means along the border.

Illegal trade is conducted not only through unauthorized methods on the ground but also through various online channels. Therefore, to prevent the entry of illegal goods, it is necessary to obtain technological assistance and carry out the required research and investigation efforts during inspection and interdiction activities.

AT the 2nd Voice of the Global South Summit hosted virtually by Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi on 17 November 2023, one key focus area was on “Sustain the momentum of exchange and sharing of ideas and best practices between member countries...”

At the 3rd Summit, also hosted by the Indian PM on 17 August 2024, there was a focus on “...challenges of new technologies and need for South-South Cooperation for technology transfers...”. Of the four-fold Global Compact put forward by PM Modi, one is on technology sharing. Thus, it is clear that as a responsible voice of the Global South, India is willing to share its knowledge and expertise acquired in governance and other fields, which accelerate development, and is also keen to learn from other nations.

India’s journey in leapfrogging development through tech-enabled citizen-centric governance has been nothing short of transformative. Key milestones in India’s digital governance experience have been:

Digital India Initiative — the flagship programme of the Government of India, launched in 2015, with a vision to transform India into a digitally empowered society and knowledge economy;

Digital from India: Leapfrogging development through text-enabled citizen-centric governance

Digital Public Infrastructure (DPI) — platforms like Aadhaar (over one billion citizens with a unique digital identity), UPI (with over 18 billion transactions in June 2025), DigiLocker (eliminating the need for physical documents), and e-Sign, have revolutionized service delivery; Direct Benefit Transfer (DBT) — India became the first country to use DBT at scale, reducing corruption and ensuring the timely delivery of welfare benefits; and AI Integration in Governance — from grievance redressal systems to predictive analytics in healthcare and agriculture, AI is helping tailor services to citizen needs.

Institutional support and strategic vision to India’s Digital Governance is provided by the Digital India Corporation (DIC), under the Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology (MeitY), the National Informatics Centre (NIC), the National Institute of Smart Governance (NISG) and a Digital Brand Identity Manual (DBIM).

The DIC is responsible for establishing the National e-Governance in Accountability, Efficiency, Efficacy and Transparency, to promote digital literacy, accessibility, and inclusion, to develop and empower skilled manpower, to guide ministries/departments in enhancing accessibility and efficiency in public service delivery, and to support the MeitY in all its endeavours.

The NIC integrates emerging technologies like AI, blockchain and data analytics into governance frameworks.

The NISG acts as a strategic partner in implementing digital transformation across central ministries and states, including international collaboration with Global South nations.

DBIM standardizes government websites and applications for a unified citizen-friendly experience.

Impact on Governance and

In terms of Transparency and Accountability, E-governance platforms have reduced bureaucratic opacity and increased public trust.

In terms of Efficiency and Accessibility, public services are now available 24/7, with reduced paperwork and faster processing times.

In terms of Inclusivity, AI-driven tools and multilingual platforms ensure services reach marginal communities.

In terms of environmental benefits, the digital processes have led to paperless offices and reduced carbon footprints.

India ranks high in digital competitiveness among G-20 nations, though challenges remain in data security, cybersecurity and digital literacy. India's model is now being replicated globally, with the India Stack serving as a blueprint for digital governance in other developing countries.

The UPI system is operational in Bhutan, Nepal, Sri Lanka, Mauritius, Singapore and France. It is at various stages of integration in Qatar, Cyprus, Malaysia, Thailand, the UK, Oman and the Maldives. On 9 July 2025, during the PM's Visit, Namibia became the first country globally to sign a licensing agreement to adopt UPI technology. On 4 July 2025, during his meeting with his counterpart, PM Modi congratulated Trinidad & Tobago on becoming the first Caribbean country to adopt UPI.

Several African nations, Cambodia and the Philippines are keen on replicating India's DPI deployment and India Stack and are availing of capacity-building programmes offered by the GOI.

DPI, UPI, AI, Aadhaar, DigiLocker, e-Sign, and other digital governance tools have been the subject of discussion and dialogue at the highest levels with countries across Asia, Africa and Latin America, including Singapore, France, Cyprus, Ghana, Brazil, Bolivia, Paraguay, Uruguay, Cuba, Argentina, Namibia, BIMSTEC partners, and Central Asian countries.

India is committed to sharing its experience and expertise with its global partners on using technology for governance and growth. India is also keen to learn and assimilate the positive experience of friendly nations in the development of technology, for the welfare and prosperity of its people.

When Comparison Becomes a Barrier to Happiness

By Laura Htet (UDE)

IT IS part of human nature to look around and observe the lives of others. From a young age, we are naturally drawn to notice how people live, what they do, and how they succeed. Sometimes, this instinct helps us feel connected, inspired, or motivated to grow. We might see someone overcoming a challenge and feel encouraged to push ourselves, too. But there is a fine line between healthy inspiration and harmful comparison, and once that line is crossed, it can quietly begin to steal our peace without us even realizing it.

We often think of loss as something being taken away from us — a missed opportunity, a broken relationship, or a setback in life. But some of the most painful emotions we experience do not come from what we have lost. Instead, they arise from what we think we lack. This feeling becomes especially powerful when we compare ourselves to someone else's achievements, lifestyle, or milestones and begin to doubt our own progress and self-worth.

In psychology, this experience is called relative deprivation. It's the uncomfortable and unsettling feeling that we are missing out, not because our lives have gotten worse, but simply because someone else's life appears to have gotten better. Even when our situation hasn't changed at all, we can suddenly feel as if it's not enough. What once felt fine now seems lacking. What once satisfied us may now feel disappointing, simply because we've looked over at someone else's life and seen more.

To understand this more clearly, imagine a small, peaceful village tucked away in the countryside. For many years, the people in this village lived simple, contented lives. Their homes were modest but similar, their values were shared, and they supported one another through life's ups and downs. The atmosphere was calm and caring. Then, one day, a family in the village built a new house. It was larger, brighter, and more elegant than any other home in the area. They hadn't taken anything from anyone else. They simply improved their own situation. But the presence of this new house stirred something among the neighbours. Warm smiles began to fade. Conversations became shorter or more awkward. A sense of discomfort grew. Slowly, suspicion and envy took root, not because the villagers were now any worse off, but because someone else had visibly gained more. The surroundings hadn't changed. But something inside the people had.

This story is a simple reflection of what happens so often in modern life. As we grow older and begin to move through different chapters of adulthood, we start to measure our progress not just by our own goals or dreams, but by how we stack up against others. We might feel satisfied with our lives until a colleague receives a promotion, a friend buys a new car, or someone posts about a luxurious vacation we've never been able to afford. In an instant, our accomplishments can feel small and unimportant, not because they are, but because they've been placed beside someone else's.

Comparison rarely stops to ask, “Am I doing well for myself?” Instead, it whispers a much more dangerous question: “Am I doing better than them?” That whisper can grow louder over time.

In today's digital world, where we are constantly exposed to people's lives online, this problem becomes even more intense. Social media platforms show us endless streams of happy photos, carefully edited pictures of new homes, glamorous holidays, and announcements of success. But these are only highlights of the moments people choose to share. We rarely see the behind-the-scenes effort, the stress, the failure, the tears, or the loneliness. These parts of life are often kept private.

Still, as we scroll through these polished and perfect images, it's easy to forget they are only pieces of a much bigger picture. And in that moment, we may begin to feel like we're not enough. We might even begin to question the value of our own lives, not because anything is wrong, but because we're seeing our reality through the distorted lens of comparison.

This kind of thinking can be deeply harmful over time. It starts to change how we see ourselves and how we interpret other people's happiness. Someone else's joy can start to feel like a threat. Their progress becomes a reminder of what we haven't done. And before long, we might find ourselves chasing dreams or goals that aren't truly ours, just to keep up, to feel like we belong, or to quiet that inner doubt.

But what if we changed our approach? What if we stepped away from the need to compare and instead focused more on who we are and what we value?

Over 170 kg of heroin worth K4.29B seized in Yamethin; 23 arrested

ACCORDING to the Myanmar Police Force, at about 6:30 am on 7 August, a combined team including security personnel inspected two vehicles carrying plastic woven bags near Kin Village, Indaing Village-tract, Yamethin Township, Mandalay Region, acting on information received.

Upon inspection, they discovered soap cases filled with 171.6 kilogrammes of heroin (estimated value K4.29 billion) that were being transported to Mandalay.

The incident occurred when security personnel stopped and searched two vehicles near Kin Village — a Mazda Bongo (registration number BGO-11 9P-xxxx) driven by Tin Moe and an I-Zone vehicle (registration number SGG-20 8K-xxxx) driven by Yazar Htun. The vehicles were loaded with plastic woven bags containing soap cases filled with heroin. Security personnel seized the 171.6 kilogrammes of heroin (estimated value K4.29 billion) and arrested the persons responsible for trafficking it — Kyaw Lwin Oo from TadaU Township — together with 22 others, including Pho Paing from Kalaw Township, who helped load the drugs onto the vehicles.

Suspects are seen with confiscated heroin and vehicles.

Investigations revealed that the heroin seized had been ordered to be transported from Kalaw Township to Yamethin Township by a person named Chit Thu (still at large). Acting on his instructions, Pho Paing and the other 22 individuals transported the drugs from Kalaw to Yamethin. It was further learned that the onward transport from Yamethin to Mandalay had been ordered by a woman named Kyu Kyu Myint

(still at large). Legal action has been taken against those arrested along with the narcotics, and efforts are continuing to apprehend other offenders connected with the case. — MNA/MKKS

Japan venture seeks to export ‘espresso’ of hot springs

Le Furo aims to export Japan’s hot springs and establish several onsen facilities in the Gulf region by 2026.

JAPAN’S renowned “onsen” hot springs, traditionally viewed as unexportable, are now on the verge of international expansion thanks to an innovative idea from Naoki Mita, CEO of the Tokyo-based venture firm Le Furo.

Mita’s company has developed a patented technology called “craft onsen,” which condenses hot spring ingredients into an ultra-high concentration, akin to espresso coffee extraction.

Le Furo aims to utilize this technology to export Japan’s hot springs, with plans to establish several onsen facilities in the Gulf region by 2026.

Historically, transporting hot springs overseas was deemed logistically challenging due to the large volume of water and concerns about contamination. However, Mita’s invention allows for the grinding of mineral resources into fine powders, making them soluble in water.

Unlike synthetic “onsen powders” that merely mimic the appearance and scent of hot springs, Le Furo’s concentrate retains the natural minerals essential for therapeutic effects.

The “Craft Onsen” product is packaged in bottles or small tanks, enabling easy distribution and use in other countries.

With Japan boasting 28,000 hot spring sources as of 2021, Le Furo is particularly targeting nations like the UAE, Oman, and Saudi Arabia, where water is a precious resource. Mita believes that Japan’s culture of health and relaxation through bathing will resonate with international audiences. — AFP

Denzel Washington prioritizes craft over awards recognition

DENZEL Washington, a celebrated actor with nine Academy Award nominations and two Oscars for his roles in “Glory” and “Training Day,” places little importance on awards, according to a recent interview with Variety.

During his press tour for “Highest 2 Lowest,” Washington emphasized that his career decisions are not influenced by the desire to win accolades. He stated, “I don’t do it for Oscars. I don’t care about that kind of stuff,” reflecting on his long career and the inconsistencies of award recognition.

One powerful truth to remember is this: life is not a competition. There is no single, perfect timeline that everyone must follow. Success has many shapes. Happiness comes in many forms. What works beautifully for one person may not suit another at all. We each have different backgrounds, strengths, challenges, and responsibilities. And those differences mean that our paths will naturally look different, too. That’s not a flaw; it’s a fact of life.

Choosing to walk our path can be difficult, especially when the world around us seems so focused on showcasing how others are walking theirs. But it is a brave and essential step if we want to find real peace and personal fulfilment.

There are a few simple but powerful things we can all do to keep comparison from taking over our thoughts and stealing our joy:

First, learn to celebrate other people’s success without letting it make us feel small. Just because someone else is experiencing something good doesn’t mean we’re falling behind. Joy is not limited. There is enough space in the world for everyone to shine.

Second, reconnect with our values. Take time to ask ourselves what truly matters to us. What makes us feel fulfilled? What goals come from our heart — not from outside pressure or expectations? Focus on building a life that reflects the person we want to be, not just the image others present.

Third, practise daily gratitude. It might sound simple, but noticing the good things we already have can change the way we see our lives. Gratitude won’t erase our problems, but it will help us feel more grounded and more aware of the beauty we’ve already created.

Lastly, be patient with our journey. Everyone’s path unfolds at a different pace. Some people may reach certain milestones earlier. Others may find success in quieter, less obvious ways. What matters is not how fast we go or how flashy our progress looks; it’s whether our path is meaningful to us.

Letting go of comparison doesn’t mean giving up on growth or ambition. It simply means we stop letting the wrong things hurt us. It means choosing peace over pressure, depth over display, and meaning over mere appearance.

It takes wisdom to admire someone’s life without wanting to trade it for our own. It takes maturity to stay committed to our goals even when someone else reaches theirs first. And it takes strength to believe that our story matters, even when it feels like others are writing faster or more beautifully.

So, the next time we hear that quiet voice inside asking, “Why not me?” — pause for a moment. Take a deep breath. Remind ourselves gently: We are not behind. We are exactly where we need to be. We are walking our path. And that, in itself, is more than enough.

Korea’s govt sees positive signs of economic recovery

Despite positive trends, concerns persist regarding the Asian economy, particularly due to delayed recovery in construction investment.

SOUTH Korea’s government on Thursday saw positive signs of economic recovery on the back of consumption growth that offset lingering uncertainties.

The Ministry of Economy and Finance said in its monthly report, called Green Book, that concerns remained about the Asian economy affected by a delayed recovery in construction investment, employment difficulties for vulnerable groups and export slump from the US tariffs imposition.

The ministry, however, noted that positive signs of economic recovery were also seen as consumer spending turned upward, thanks to policy effects.

It said the global economy was worried about facing continued volatility in the global financial market and sluggishness in trade and growth due to the worsened trade environment, vowing to rapidly implement its supplementary budget and support local companies damaged by the US tariff imposition.

As part of its extra budget plan, the government began to offer cash handouts to all people last month in a bid to bolster the sagging private consumption.

Sentiment among consumers over economic situations improved for four consecutive months in July.

Credit card spending expanded 6.3 per cent in July from a year earlier, while the number of Chinese tourists visiting the country surged 36.2 per cent in the cited month.

Exports swelled 5.9 per cent in July from a year earlier, while shipments to the United States added 1.4 per cent in July after sliding for the past three months. — Xinhua

Philippines’ approved foreign investments down 64.4% in Q2

THE Philippines’ approved foreign investments (FI) in the second quarter of 2025 reached 67.38 billion pesos (roughly US$1.19 billion), down 64.4 per cent from a year earlier, the Philippine Statistics Authority (PSA) said Thursday.

Singapore was the leading source of FI pledges, accounting for 79.4 per cent of the total approved FI, the PSA said.

The PSA added that the electricity, gas, steam, and air conditioning supply industry attracted the largest share of FI, followed by administrative and support service activities, and the manufacturing industry.

Total approved investments from both foreign and Filipino nationals in the second quarter of 2025 reached 299.08 billion pesos (about $5.27 billion), a 58.5 per cent decline from a year earlier. — Xinhua

UK economy slows less than feared after tariffs

BRITAIN’S economy performed better than expected in the second quarter as it weathered the impact of US tariffs and a higher UK business tax, official data showed Thursday.

Gross domestic product grew 0.3 per cent in the April-June period, the Office for National Statistics (ONS) said in a statement — beating analyst forecasts of 0.1 per cent growth after reaching 0.7 per cent in the first quarter.

“Today’s economic figures are positive with a strong start to the year and continued growth in the second quarter,” said finance minister Rachel Reeves.

“But there is more to do to deliver an economy that works for working people,” she added in a statement, following a difficult first year in power for the Labour government as the economy struggles to grow significantly. — AFP

India’s microfinance industry stress continues, to witness muted loan growth till 2Q-3QFY26

THE stress continues in the Indian microfinance industry, which is expected to see muted loan growth for a few more quarters, till 2Q-3QFY26 before recovery begins, noted a report by Morgan Stanley.

The report stated that growth in assets under management (AUM) for microfinance institutions (MFIs) has slowed or even declined in recent quarters. In 4QFY25, some institutions posted double-digit declines in quarterly growth.

It stated, “We see continued stress, muted loan growth for few more quarters (till 2Q-3QFY26) before recovery begins”.

Highlighting some companies, the report stated that Spandana Sphoorty recorded the sharpest drop at 24 per cent, followed by Asirvad MFI with an 18 per cent fall. IndusInd Bank and Fusion MFI posted declines of five per cent.

While Bandhan Bank reported a seven per cent drop in 1QFY26.

Gaza attack plan

ISRAEL'S military chief Eyal Zamir on Wednesday approved the main framework of a government plan to expand the offensive in Gaza to areas not yet under Israeli control. The offensive will later target refugee camps in central Gaza and the southern area of Al Mawasi, where most of Gaza's 2.2 million residents have taken shelter, according to a statement by the Israeli military. The principles of the plan were approved in a meeting of security officials earlier on Wednesday, the statement said, adding that “the central concept for the plan for the next stages in the Gaza Strip was presented and approved, in accordance with the directive of the political echelon.” — Xinhua

N Korea rejects S Korea’s conciliatory
approach as “pipe dream”

North Korea denied Seoul’s assertion that it had removed loudspeakers used for propaganda along the border.

NORTH Korea on Thursday rejected the conciliatory approach taken by the new South Korean government of President Lee Jae Myung as a “pipe dream”, denying Seoul’s claim that Pyongyang has removed loudspeakers for blasting noise along the border in response to a similar move by the South. Kim Yo Jong, the sister of North Korean leader Kim Jong Un and a senior ruling party official, said in a statement carried by the official Korean Central News Agency, “We have never removed loudspeakers installed on the border area and are not willing to remove them,” adding Seoul is “misleading the public opinion”. Soon after his inauguration in June, Lee ordered the South Korean military to stop propaganda loudspeaker broadcasts along the border with North Korea in an effort to ease tensions on the Korean Peninsula. Last week, Seoul said it has begun dismantling the loudspeakers. The broadcasts had been resumed after a six-year hiatus under Lee’s predecessor Yoon Suk Yeol, who adopted a hard-line stance on Pyongyang. — Kyodo

The contribution agreement, part of Beijing’s annual donation, was signed in the Jordanian capital by Zeng Jixin, head of China’s office to the State of Palestine, and Karim Amer, UNRWA’s director of partnerships. Man dragged away by brown bear on Hokkaido mountain, still missing

A man in his 20s was attacked and dragged away by a brown bear Thursday on Mt Rausu on Japan’s northern main island of Hokkaido and remains missing, according to local police. Authorities were notified around 11:10 am by the man’s companion after the two encountered the bear at an altitude of about 550 metres.
